There is the present situation at glance. The navy league is crying for more ships; equally zealous persons are insisting on the strengthening of the army. But where is the money for these luxuries to come from. The people urging fresh expenditure will not tolerate a scheme to raise it by succession duties, and new taxes, affecting the working classes, will strengthen the hand of the socialists. It is a pretty dilemma.

Eccentric Old Man Was Regarded With Awe in the Chelsea Section.

Foreign Correspondence of The Star. LONDON, March 22, 1912. There has just died at Chelsea. Dr. John Samuel Phene, a rich eccentric old gentleman whose mysterious life has been the subject of much conjecture and gossip. For more than sixty years Dr. Phene lived the life of a recluse, relieved by periods of social intercourse. No one about steady; spring patents, 5.25a5.50; winter straights, 4.35a4.50; winter patents, knew that he had any relatives until he 4.60a4.80; spring clears, 4.25a4.50; winter died at the age of ninety, and now some relatives have been found.

Eccentric, but kind to the small circle of friends who knew him years ago, Dr. Phene was known widely, mainly owing ernment report next Tuesday caused a half cent advance in wheat early. May, to the fact that one of his houses, opposite that in which he died, is perhaps Beef-Firm; mess, 13.50a14.00; family, the most fantastically decorated in London. Yet there was a purpose in the years of work which he lavished on this building, which has remained empty for many years. He has written the history Hay-Quiet; prime, 1.40; No. 1, 1.35; No. of his family in stone.

The house stands at the corner of Oakley street and Upper Cheyne row. It is a large building of about s.x stories, and its grim walls are coated with the grime of many winters. Carved in the stone above the portico are the words, "Renaissance du Chateau de Savenay." On the pillars beside the windows and above, to the top of the house, on the Cheyne-row side, are angels, griffins, coats of arms, mottoes, and gargoyles. On the parapet are figures of Priam of Troy and Hecuba. A motto stands in relief-"Ex supero spe ougnam." It is a wonderful house, and t is an imitation, as far as possible, of the one occupied by Dr. Phene's ancestors at Savenay, on the Loire. The dead loctor traced his family from the Phoenicians through Persia, India, Troy and Italy, and has made a lasting monument to his name. The house has been called "Phene's Folly," but the doctor did not mind gossip. For many years he kept a stan of workmen in a worksho garden making these statues and figures.

Had Fed Acquaintances. Throughout Chelsea the eccentric old man was regarded with something akin to come near his abode. He lived in Oakley street, so that he could see his handiwork progressing on the empty house of mysthe bulls. May opened a shade off to 1/8 he had been introduced to Dr. Phene grain, but met an unusual aggregate of was that he wished to give the people of an upward tilt. Trade, however, was only four or five years ago Dr. Phene put a "At the end of the garden of this strange house stands another, smaller, and built in the style of Queen Anne with this, and I have it on good authority shows that the banks hold $383,300 re- though all is prepared, the breakfast is This is a decrease of $7.646,800 in the pro- years ago it was prepared for a wedding portionate cash reserve as compared with but the bride died on her wedding morn, and in despair Dr. Phene shut up the

That the doctor was a scholar is proven by the fact that he was LLD., F. S. A., M. R. T., V. P. R. S. L., F. R. I. B. A. for the past fifty years stated that he had traveled widely in his younger days. About twenty years ago he gave magnificent dinners, but all these had been stopped. On one occasion he had Lord and Lady Kelvin to a garden party, when he lectured on his travels and dis played his curios to his guests. In the garden was a forge, and the paths were only about two feet wide, and were almost as intricate as a maze. Everywhere were statues, some of the royal family, and at the coornation of King Edward he had all the statues of the royal family arranged on his balcony and photograped as if they were living people. In his younger days he had journeyed all round he world, studying tribes and people who worshiped serpents, and five years ago was master of the Clothworkers' Company. He owned a large amount of property and land in Chelsea. One of the largest figures his workmen made in his private workshop was a huge statue of Queen Victoria, and some of the smallest were of pigmies.
